

Marc Rudow
OF COUNSEL

Marc Rudow practices commercial and residential real estate law and land conservation. Marc's clients range from large business enterprises to first time home buyers who need a patient and trusted advisor. Marc's real estate practice includes every detail of a real estate transaction from the initial contract through due diligence to closing. He is responsive to client concerns and questions, working to make transactions run as smoothly as possible.

Marc works with the land trust community in many capacities and is very familiar with all of the organizations that are dedicated to protect land in NC. Marc is professional, yet friendly, and has cultivated long term relationships in the Asheville area for over 45 years which help him better serve his clients.

Marc was born in New York City, but has lived in Asheville since 1974 and has been with this firm or its predecessor for over 40 years. He has been an active member of the community, chairing a number of non-profit boards both locally and statewide. Marc also works with many non-profit organizations as a volunteer, board member, and attorney, often providing legal services at a reduced rate. He is an avid conservationist, musician, martial artist, and hiker. He graduated from UNC Law School in 1979 and is married to Deborah Miles, former Director of the Center for Diversity Education at UNC-Asheville, with whom he has three grown sons.
